Re Item V.

The following documents may be referred to in this communication:

- D1: US 2002/173344 A1 (CUPPS BRYAN T ET AL) 21 November 2002 (2002-11-21)
- D2: 'Howto VNC oder wie kann man die Inhalte des Zaurus-Bildschirms einem grösseren Publikum präsentieren ?' SHARP ELECTRONICS EUROPE GMBH, [Online] 15 January 2003 (2003-01-15), XP002263999 Retrieved from the Internet: <URL:http://www.zaurus.de/SharpServiceArea /Infoware/FAQs/Info_20030115150712/downloa d> [retrieved on 2003-12-03]

3.

- D3: GB-A-2 377 776 (WIZARD MOBILE SOLUTIONS LTD) 22 January 2003 (2003-01-22)
- D4: Linux Tutorial Networking NFS.
- Claim 1 lacks clarity in the sense of Article 6 PCT.

In particular, the following terms are subject to several, sometimes mutually excluding interpretations:

- a) "delivering a service using an application" may simply mean
 - "running the application", or
 - "reading the application's data or code" but may also mean
 - "contacting an external service provider such as a bank and exchanging information with this service provider";
- b) nor is it clear from the claim whether the application is being run on the portable object itself or on the first device, i.e. is the portable object "smart"? All the reader may deduce is that the application is being stored ("lodged"!) at some point in time on the portable object;
- c) the term "resources" is very generic, implying either (or both of)
 - software or
 - hardware;

this point is important as the first device is defined in terms of a second device which does not use these resources; it is not clear which "resources" may or may not be used by the second device.

- d) the fact that the first device is defined in terms of a second device also results in an unclear claim, as no key-lock correspondence is established; a system claim covering both devices would be more appropriate).
- 2. As an illustration of this lack of clarity, the examiner will comment D1 in the light of the claim. While it appears from the application description that its subject-matter should differ strongly from D1, claim 1 seems to lack novelty (Art. 33(2) PCT) in the light of D1 if one considers the unclear features of claim 1 to be non-limitative:
 - D1 discloses a first device (a PDA/wireless phone hybrid) which gives a second device (A POS terminal) access to an application stored on a SIM card (see paragraph [0048] and following) located in its SIM card reader.
- 3. In a similar vein, document D2 shows a method which allows a user to use applications stored on a Linux PDA (the Sharp Zaurus SL-5500, which features two readers for external memories [one for Compact Flash, the other for Secure Digital memory]) via a PC through the use of a VNC client/server set-up.
 - The examiner fails to see which features in the application claim could contribute to the novelty of the claimed subject-matter over D2. It is however not excluded that this is a consequence of the lack of clarity of the claim.
- 4. It is difficult to further assess the novelty and/or the inventive step of the application in its present state. In its present form, the claim even leads the examiner to doubt that the subject-matter of the application actually goes beyond the principles known from the extremely well known NFS filesystem mounting scheme, which allows users to share memory devices of all types on different machines (cf. D4).
